Story

We are trying to build applications that can be created without any hard coding knowledge required. We believe in the ease of use of spreadsheets in business so everything we have developed is based loosely off of that system. We have a working prototype and are almost at launch but now we need to completely finish it up. By this we mean we need to complete all the functionality we are planning to launch, iron out all the bugs, and begin constructing a better customer support network. We also have more planned functionality that we can streamline the completion of once we acquire the sufficient funds as well. This functionality includes "zero hard coding" website creation, web app creation, an integrated application template marketplace, etc.

Risks and challenges

The main obstacle we face is developing a consistent layout for all devices and all platforms. This is so we can have a place in the technological ecosystem. To overcome this, we have team members with expertise in mobile development (Android and Apple), web development, enterprise applications, etc. that have the means to collaborate and apply everything that is needed, provided we have the sufficient funds.
